INTRODUCTION

Farmers' markets play a vital role in the sale of agricultural products for many farmers throughout the United States. Small- and medium-sized farms face many obstacles in marketing their products to organizational buyers. Marketing farm products directly to consumers shortens the channel of distribution, minimizes handling, and increases profit to farmers. Marketing all or part of their production directly to consumers is essential for many farmers to stay on the land.

Market research indicates that three of every four shoppers cite quality as a reason for shopping at area farmers' markets. Other reasons include variety, atmosphere, convenience, and a desire to help farmers. Whereas the average supermarket "trading area" is a 2- to 3-mile radius, the trading area for farmers' markets is 10 miles.

Direct marketing of farm products to consumers has seen tremendous growth over the past two decades. During this period, farmers' markets, one of several direct marketing options available to producers, increased substantially throughout the United States. The Farmer-To-Consumer Direct-Marketing Act of 1976 (P.L. 94-463) perpetuated a growing interest among farmers and consumers for direct exchange of farm products. Continued interest and support for this form of marketing has caused the development of 1,755 farmers' markets by the end of 1993.

The NATIONAL FARMERS' MARKET DIRECTORY attempts to list all farmers' markets operating in the United States at the end of 1993. Farmers' markets are defined as a group of farmers and vendors leasing or renting space in a common facility, on a temporary basis, with an emphasis on the sale of fresh farm products, crafts, and other locally produced items. This directory is intended to provide an information resource for farmers, operators, and the public. It lists markets by name, location, contact person, telephone number, and type of operation (open-air/seasonal or year-round). Year-round denotes that some type of covered facilities exist at the market. Some markets were designated seasonal operations--no facilities, but operating year-round. This information will enable users to identify a particular facility and make contact to get information.

It is anticipated that the directory will be updated on a regular schedule. Submit suggestions, comments, or market data corrections for future directories to the following address.
